YOU CAN HAVE IT ALL

"Every Thanksgiving I run out of space on my dessert plate, so I wanted to put everything I love in one slice," says Zac Young, pastry director of Craveable Hospitality Group. Consider this over-the-top cake a triumph of efficiency. Last year Young's six-flavor, triple-decker PieCaken took the internet by storm. Now you can bring the five-inch-tall masterpiece to your holiday table, where it can satisfy up to 14 guests:

As of November 1, PieCaken will be available for nationwide delivery. ($65; thepiecakenshop.com)

Piecaken – ‘the turducken of desserts’ – returns for Thanksgiving

The trifecta on a fork is the creation of a Maine native who is a pastry chef in New York City.

Only in America – land of the free and the bottomless pit holiday table – would you find a dessert creation so audacious, so over-the-top, so enticing as the piecaken.

It takes a pastry chef with a lot of talent – and a good sense of humor – to pull off this silly addition to the Thanksgiving table, a description that perfectly fits Zac Young, the irrepressible pastry director for the Craveable Hospitality Group (formerly known as the David Burke Group) in New York City.
